How the Guests Enjoy Themselves-Richmond and Other People.

[Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.] NATURAL BRIDGE, August 17, 1888. Natural Bridge is a delightful place at which to spend the sultry August days. The mois', stifling atmosphere common to so many localities during this month is here unknown. Cool breezes blow, be the sun never so hot, keeping the air fresh and elastic. The season-by the way, Lord Byron is said to have invented the expression "the season," and what a section, the House, at 5 o'clock, adseason is at its height suggests more than could be told in a long letter. Well, the season here is at its height, and there is an agreeable stir and activity about the place. The lawns and veran-das are bright with the pretty toilets of the ladies; a subdued murmur of voices breaks softly on the air, with now and again a ring of merry laughter; every one is in holiday humor, and the days are a ceaseless round of pleasure.

There is an abundance of amusement, sufficiently varied to suit different tastes and inclinations. The deep forests, shady glens, and tangled hollows invite while those disinclined to exercise gather in groups on the pleasant verandas to engage in friendly gossip and to enjoy the lovely scene that spreads before them. For those given to athletic sports there are lawn-tennis, target-shooting.

All ordinary remedies failing, we affeed our family physician, who attempted to cure it, but it spread with atmost incredible rapidity, until the lower portion of the little follow's person, from the middle of his back down to his knees, was one solid rash, usiy, peinful, holothed, and malicloss. We had no rost at night, no peace by day. Finally we were advised to try the Curticuya Rarenzes. The effect was simply marvoidous. In three or four weeks a complete cure was wrough, leaving the fittle fellow's person as white and besidty as though be had never been attacked. In my opinion your valuable rumedies saved his life, and to-day he is a strong, healthy child, perfectly well, no repetition of the disease having ever occurred.
